

Abstract

A system and method to control engine valve 5 timing to during the start of an internal combustion engine. Electromechanical valves are controlled in a manner to reduce engine vibration and hydrocarbon emissions during the start of an internal combustion engine. The method controls valves without an explicit 10 four-stroke engine cycle during a start.